APPEARANCE

A tall, slender, female Aasimar in her early 20s with glowing pupil-less golden eyes, shimmering copper skin, and short fluffy silver hair. Despite her ethereal look, she has a somewhat vacant expression. She is wearing the garb of a clockwork sorcerer, donned mainly in white with golden gears and symbols. She has feathers along her shoulders due to her celestial heritage, but they have not formed into full wings.

BACKSTORY & PERSONALITY

As an Aasimar, Thandresa was raised by her human father, and did not remember her celestial mother. With the world falling apart, hard times hit her village and poverty was rampant. Thandresa followed the guidance of the god of renewal and hope, Lathandre, hoping to restore peace and vitality to the dying world, and bring prosperity to her village. However, her connection to her patron deity was severed when she ate hot pot filled with poisonous mushrooms and came down with a terrible magic-borne illness that left her in an enchanted sleep. With no hope in sight, her father abandoned her, and left her to sleep for two years. In her enchanted sleep, she dreamt of a new life in a beautiful, prosperous land with lush greenery and wildlife. She dreamt she had a husband and an infant son, whom she'd named Picanha. For those two years, she truly believed she was given the gift of living in this beautiful world from her patron deity.

When she finally awoke to see the world around her as chaotic as she'd left it before her illness, and she had no family left waiting for her, she had a hard time believing that this was the true reality, instead of the peaceful place she'd dreamt of. When
